

- And the auditorium?
- It was to the left hand side. Next to the bar. Also rather small. Black walls. The chairs were covered with battered green velvet.
- Like an old cinema.
- Yes.
- The light was dim.
There were technicians running around. Busy preparing things.
People would sit in the rows or stand around close to the walls, discussing the shows, laughing and smoking.
The stage was only a few feet above the ground, maybe knee-high.
Made of wood, painted black. It was maybe 25 feet wide.
A small proscenium theater.
The curtain was closed.
I think it was also black.
At the top there was a small gap between the curtain and the roof because the curtain was sagging towards the middle.
- And was he there?
- Who?
- Robert Morris.
- Yes. I remember seeing him in the audience.
He also presented something.
A theater performance.
I remember it very vividly.
Originally he was supposed to perform in it himself.
- And why didn't he?
- He injured himself at the head during a rehearsal and had to change his plans.

David Weber-Krebs 2/5/2011 08:42

Comment [1]: I remember it clearly?